- Breakthroughs:
  - The Education Equality Task Force incorporated the input we and other organizations had provided via September 2002 deputations, into their final report. Recommendation 13 states: “I recommend that the government establish a Cabinet-level advisory council on integrated services for children and families, composed of representatives from the Ministries of Community, Family and Children’s Services, Education, Health and Long-Term Care, Public Safety and Security, and Tourism and Recreation, to meet on a regular basis to align the work and the funding mechanisms of the ministries that serve families, children and youth.”
  - Ministry of Education attended national CASH conferences 2005 & 2006

- Positive Developments/Results/Context:
  - 2003 Ministry of Education included dedicated staff on healthy schools within the Policy Development and Implementation Unit, Policy and Program Branch
  - Dec 2006 Ministry of Education and Ministry of Health Promotion launched “Healthy School Recognition Program,” with key document “Foundations for a Healthy School”
  - Implementation of CSH/HPS initiatives in numerous jurisdictions across province
  - Province-wide change outcomes, e.g. policies re vending machines, daily physical activity, bullying prevention—Ministry of Education supportive of Healthy Schools & Safe Schools
  - Enhanced province-wide capacity (but more to be done)
  - Local data re health and social outcomes
  - April 2007 Draft Ontario Public Health Standards were released. While they do not explicitly mention Comprehensive School Health or youth, they do require health units to use comprehensive health promotion approaches in working with community partners, including school boards and schools.
  - Many public health units, school boards and other organizations have adopted the “Healthy Schools” phrase and are using the “Foundations for a Healthy School” framework
